

TeamUp

Discover the power and impact of feedback: growing together as a team towards (even) greater success.

Success for everyone

Feedback is essential for good performance. Practically speaking, however, giving and receiving feedback is experienced as complicated or difficult. Because it is a sensitive issue, information can be withheld and not shared.

The value of feedback

TeamUp trains teams to appreciate that feedback doesn't have to be emotionally charged but can be functional and helpful. All the players experience the value of feedback. Giving and receiving feedback becomes the norm. Everyone within the team and the team as a whole work more powerfully and more successfully as a result.

Stronger together

TeamUp challenges players to intense collaboration. Feedback from others is essential to success. Every team member has information useful to others. If information is shared well, everyone can deliver the highest results. The important lesson is: if the other is successful, then everyone is successful.

"I got to know my colleagues better in an hour than I have in the past two years!"

Seeing feedback as a functional and valuable aid

TeamUp re-introduces your team members to one another in a new, positive and engrossing way. While playing the game, they discover each other's qualities and challenges and discuss issues that really matter within your team.

Battleship

Each session starts with a modern version of Battleship. You play against TeamUp's A.I. (Artificial Intelligence). Place your ships in strategic positions and try to hit the A.I. ships. You and your colleagues will all get hints to help one another. Find the best way to share and help everyone - and that includes you - to be successful (win).

Feedback Challenge

Feedback Challenge helps you get to know one another better. Participants choose a category for each round, share personal information, give each other feedback and discuss their answers. The facilitator leads the conversations in the right direction, ensuring that even difficult subjects are put on the table and that they are discussed in a safe environment.

The impact

Playing TeamUp ensures that feedback becomes part of daily working practices and contributes to the team's results. The game helps create a safe learning culture with valuable conversations and respect for each other. TeamUp encourages your team to look beyond the bounds of their own job, help each other and be successful together.

"I often found feedback to be unnecessarily fraught or complicated, with TeamUp we have found that it has become very valuable and even fun!"

Play TeamUp face-to-face, hybrid or online

TeamUp is ready to play for all teams. The game is always facilitated by an experienced facilitator who provides a safe space where valuable conversations can take place. Team members can join in from any location, home, hybrid or face-to-face at work.

Can be played as often as you like

The duration of a TeamUp game can vary from one to four hours, depending on the goal and the situation within your team(s). Your team(s) can also play TeamUp several times over weeks or months, keeping the focus on the power of collaboration and feedback. You can also play the game with different combinations of players, gain experience and further improve the skills within the team.

The team's own answers form the basis

All colleagues answer a number of questions about themselves at the beginning of the game. These are used during the Feedback Challenge to learn from each other and get to know one another better.

Versatile

TeamUp has been developed based on universal questions in the fields of feedback, personal leadership, core qualities, challenges and motivations. A unique game is always created by the players' own answers. If specific issues or problems arise within your organization, TeamUp can be expanded. We'd be happy to discuss your wishes in person and will always offer a tailor-made solution.

How TeamUp works: the dynamics and flow in this challenging and interactive game

TeamUp is a uniquely personal experience for every team. Whether you play it face-to-face, hybrid or completely virtually. TeamUp creates connections, because as a team you create new experiences, you get to know each other better and you learn that feedback does not have to be emotionally charged but rather functional and helpful. As a result, everyone is more successful.

*Hello,
I'm Julia and I'd love to take you on my TeamUp journey and how it works for your team. Do you have any questions afterward? You can always let us know!*

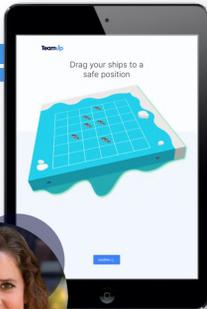

01

Fill out the questionnaire

At the start of the game, all team members fill out a short questionnaire. The answers will be reflected later in the Feedback Challenge.

Let's play!

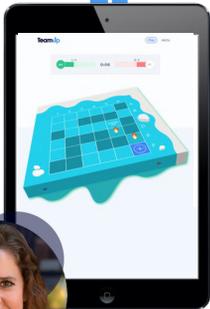

We start with the Battleship Game. Put your ships in a safe position and wait until everyone in the team has done the same.

"I have moved my ships into position. Let the battle begin!"

02

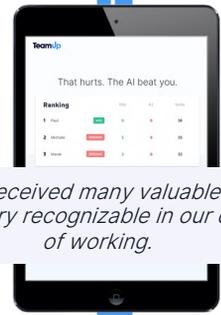

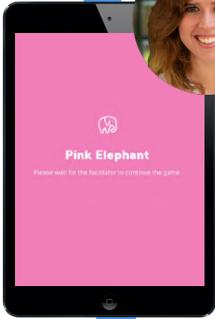

"The game begins. I get to be the first to try to hit the A.I.'s ships. Meanwhile, I see hints that may help my colleagues. I'm happy to tell them!"

03

06

"I feel like there is something else going on that actually blocks our team more often. I would like to discuss that and so I'm bringing the 'pink elephant' into the game."

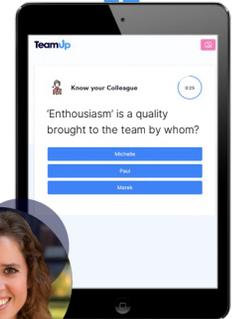

"We have received many valuable insights. It is also very recognizable in our daily way of working."

04

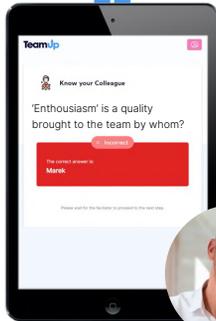

Start the Feedback Challenge

Teams reflect on what is going well and what could be better. Colleagues give each other compliments, but also talk about personal challenges and issues that (may) arise.

"I feel a bit jittery, but I am also looking forward to it. I'll start with a question in the 'Know your colleague' category."

05

"Hey, that's funny, I thought that trait really suited you, Paul!"

"How nice of you to say that, thank you. I would have chosen Marek myself, I always find his enthusiasm so infectious."

"I think that, too. This is nice! I'm already looking forward to the next question!"
